

Urban Farm® Magazine

New from the editors of Hobby Farms and Hobby Farm Home!

Buy Now » It doesn't take a farm to have the heart of a farmer. Now, due to a burgeoning sustainable-living movement, you don't have to own acreage to fulfill your dream of raising your own food. The new Urban Farm® magazine, from the editors of Hobby Farms, will walk you down the path to self sustainability. « We're following urban farming in the news » Urban Farm® magazine's mission is to promote the benefits of self sustainability and to provide the tools with which to do it on any size property. Urban Farm® reaches out to those in the city and suburbs, those who are inspired by the local food movement and who want to start raising chickens and growing food for themselves, supporting local agriculture and living more sustainably.

Urban farms are popping up all over America. However, things are different on an urban farm, versus a rural hobby farm. With less space to work with, projects must be scaled down, efficiency becomes crucial, and one must be resourceful to use every inch of space and recycle every unused object into something useful.

Urban Farm® is informational and inspirational, filled with how-to projects, profiles of urban farmers across America, "green" and innovative products, and of course, recipes for preparing your homegrown vegetables, eggs and other farm bounty.

Look for the Spring 2010 issue of Urban Farm on your local newsstand January 12. Urban Farm magazine will be published four times in 2010 and is not yet available for subscription. You can also shop online for the current print issue or digital back issues.